News from America: Reporting on the United States – Saturday, Oct 12, 2108 at 2 PM

The Swenson Center will host a panel discussion on how foreign journalists report on news from the United States, using Sweden as an example. Foreign news media have a long tradition of stationing correspondents in America. These reporters play an essential role in shaping their readers' perception of America. Today, the internet provides Swedes with easy access to American media. How does this abundance of American news affect the work of journalists? Free and open to the public.
